

Acceptable Use Policy for Hopkins KnowledgeNet

All of the electronic materials, content, information, and resources included in the Hopkins KnowledgeNet World Wide Web site, including all external sites and entities to which KnowledgeNet provides hyperlinks, are made available subject to the following conditions and terms of use. By using KnowledgeNet, you agree to be bound by these conditions and terms and to comply with them, and with any other limitations expressly listed within the pages of KnowledgeNet.

KnowledgeNet is provided exclusively to serve the intellectual enrichment and lifelong learning goals of the alumni of the Johns Hopkins University. Any other use of KnowledgeNet content or services, such as for commercial purposes, or as a substitute for a corporate information service, is strictly prohibited. By using KnowledgeNet materials and services, you agree to restrict your use of these materials and services, including all licensed and third-party materials, to personal lifelong learning purposes. In addition, KnowledgeNet, its content and its staff do not provide medical, legal, or financial advice, or any other professional service, and no information found in or through KnowledgeNet may be construed to do so.

The materials and content included in KnowledgeNet are subject to United States and international copyright law. You agree to comply with such law when you use these materials. Such compliance includes, but may not be restricted to, the following: you may not make multiple copies of, or sell or otherwise distribute copies of, any content posted on this site, nor of excerpts of content posted on this site; when making single copies of content posted on this site for your personal use, or of excerpts of content posted on this site for your personal use, you must include any copyright information displayed upon or within that document; you may not make any digital or electronic copies of any content at this site (other than the single digital copy made by your browser in order to view the page), nor may you copy any content from this site into any other electronic or digital document or file such as a World Wide Web page; you may not hyperlink to any content at this site using any hypertext presentation method, such as "frames", that hides the original and real Uniform Resource Locator (Internet address) of that content, or in any other way compromise the integrity and autonomy of this site. Anyone wishing to make any use of the material of this site, exclusive of reading or making a single copy for personal use under the restrictions described above, is urged to contact KnowledgeNet for permission by contacting the Alumni Services Librarian (telephone number and e-mail address are found in this site).

KnowledgeNet affirms the American Library Association Code of Ethics. Reference queries made by Johns Hopkins University alumni will be held confidential.

KnowledgeNet provides links to external materials, resources, and entities to complement the licensed resources and original content at KnowledgeNet. The choice of external material is made on the basis of its potential value to the Johns Hopkins University alumni community. In addition, members of the Johns Hopkins University alumni community may suggest hyperlinks to other resources that they have found to be of value. External materials are evaluated for provenance and currency before inclusion in KnowledgeNet and all hyperlinks are annotated to designate their external status and their content. KnowledgeNet does not control the content included in the external materials and entities to which it links, and as such cannot be held responsible or liable for the accuracy, integrity, point of view, or philosophy of any external content, nor to the choice of other content providers to which external materials and entities might themselves provide hyperlinks. KnowledgeNet may provide hyperlinks to external search engines or directories; it cannot be held responsible or liable for any content derived through the use of these utilities, and warns readers that such content may include materials that may be found offensive, inappropriate or unsuitable by some readers. While we strive to provide high quality, consistently available material, KnowledgeNet cannot guarantee the accessibility or availability of any external resource, entity, service or agency. By using KnowledgeNet services, you agree and acknowledge that KnowledgeNet shall not be held responsible or directly or indirectly liable for the content, services, products, or offers, or for any real or alleged damage incurred or caused by their use, that may be provided by or through any external entity, service, or agency. In addition, KnowledgeNet does not promote or endorse external entities, services, or agencies. KnowledgeNet urges all readers to use discretion and exercise their own judgment when using all types of information. Readers should note that external materials, resources, and entities to which KnowledgeNet provides hyperlinks will represent a variety of viewpoints and opinions.

KnowledgeNet is designed to serve the lifelong learning and intellectual enrichment needs of Johns Hopkins University alumni. The resources herein are not written or evaluated to suit the needs of children. We strongly urge that parents identify Internet materials that they feel appropriate for the use of their children, and that they teach and supervise their children in the use of the Internet.