"Well . . .

. . . I guess it's not as good as Yale or Princeton. Certainly not in the humanities and social sciences." He nodded sagely, conceding the point. And he looked across the table at me seeking agreement, encouragement.

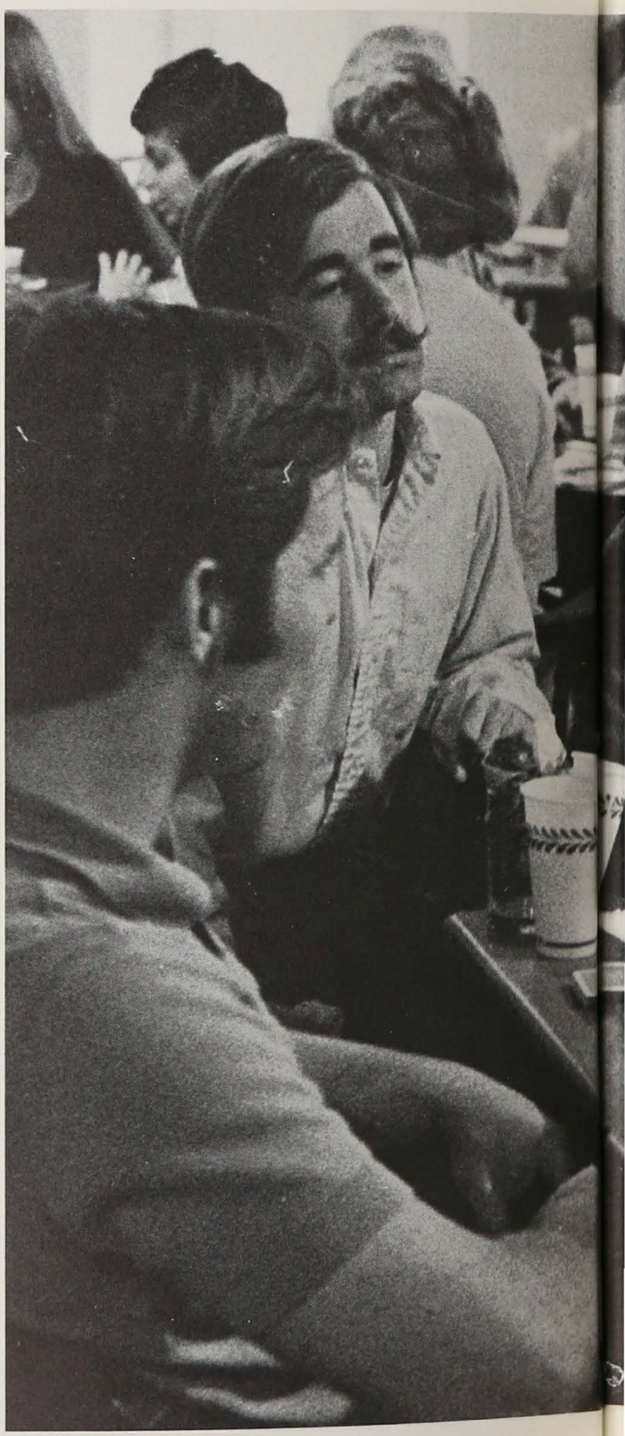

He lifted his coke off his freshman chem book and stared into it for a moment. I helped him out. "D'you apply to Harvard and Yale?" I asked.

"Yeah—waiting list at Harvard," he looked up again, with a wry smile.

He was from my home town, you see, and I'd known his big sister and when he came to Hopkins, she said, he should give me a call. He'd called the day before and here he was buying me a coke in Levering Hall. He hadn't gotten to Levering much his first semester at Hopkins. Freshmen don't, generally.

You could tell he wanted to know about it. He looked around a lot. That was it, you see, he wanted to know but he couldn't ask the questions and I wasn't sure I could tell him.

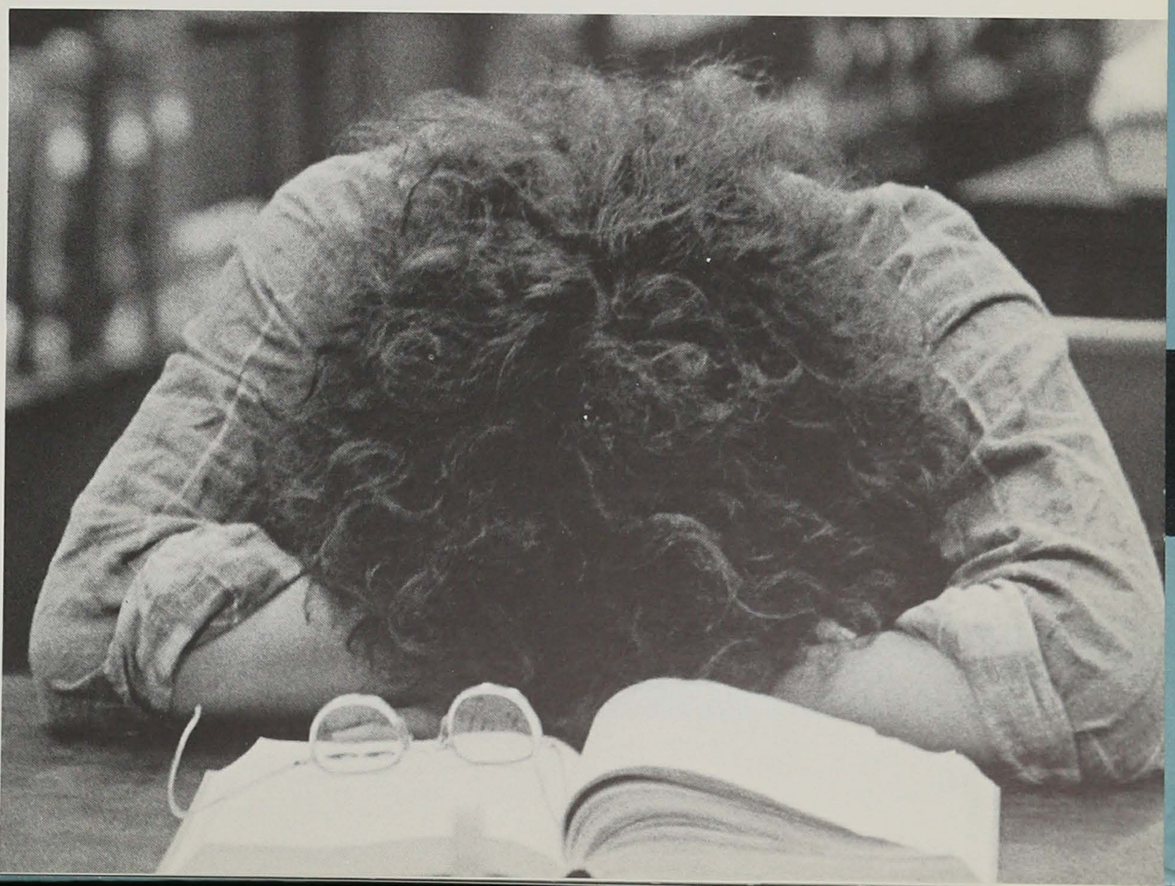

I knew, of course. Seniors do, generally. I knew all about Hopkins. But how would I tell him? I knew what I wondered when I was like him, sitting with a guy who my brother knew. I was worried then. I hoped that Brookings wasn't much better than SAIS. I felt guilty when the new Newsweek arrived in my box and I hadn't even opened last week's. I was shocked that I could do the schoolwork—it should have been impossible—I would have to do better next term.

So I bought that guy a coke and watched as he threw his notebook (one small one) onto the table as only a senior could. I set my armload down on a chair and I wanted to ask—I waited for him to tell me.

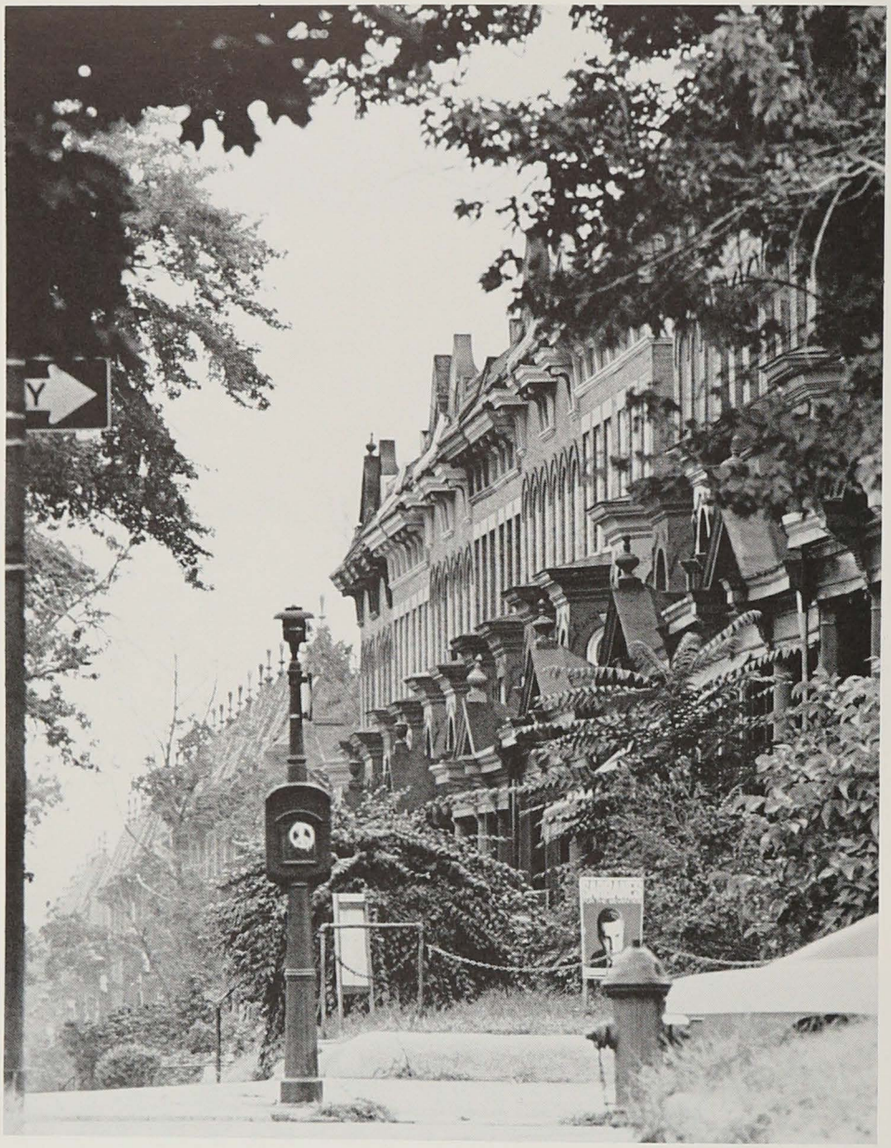

And now I knew how he felt.

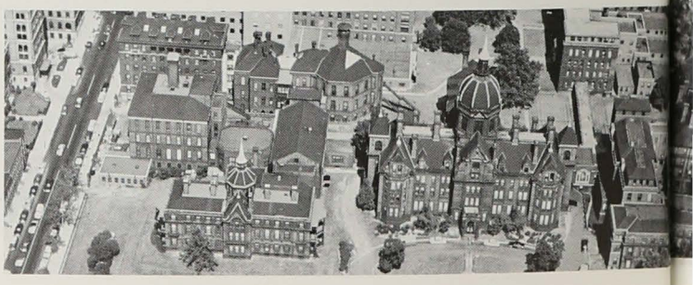

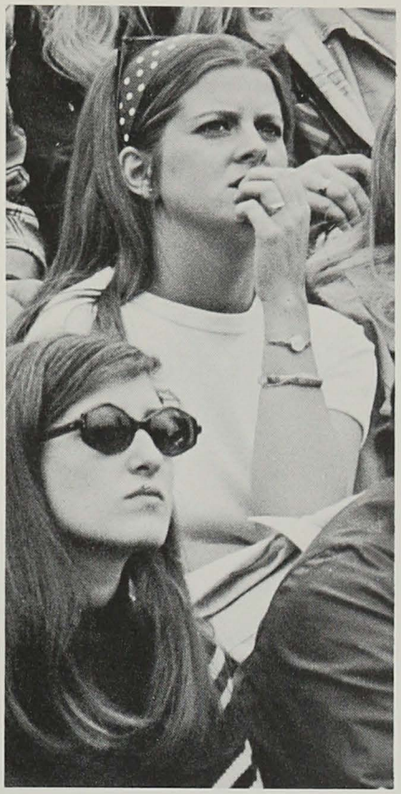

What could we say? Dr. Wickwire understands?

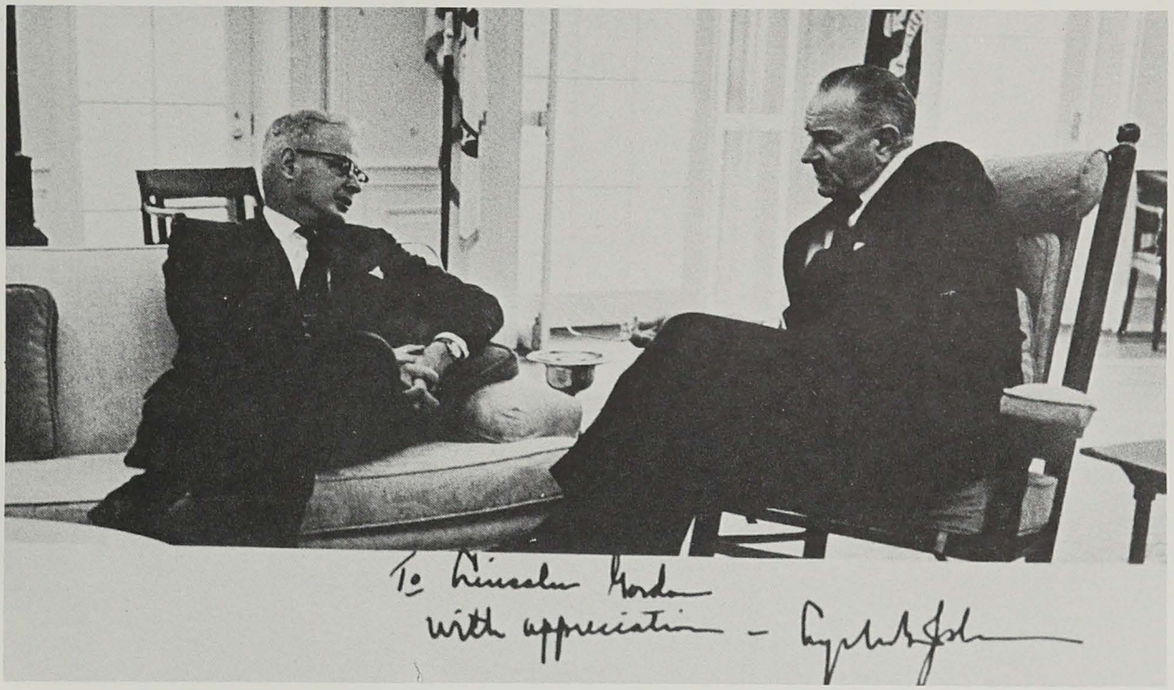

Carl Swanson is very concerned? The Hospital doesn't matter? Goucher chicks are afraid?

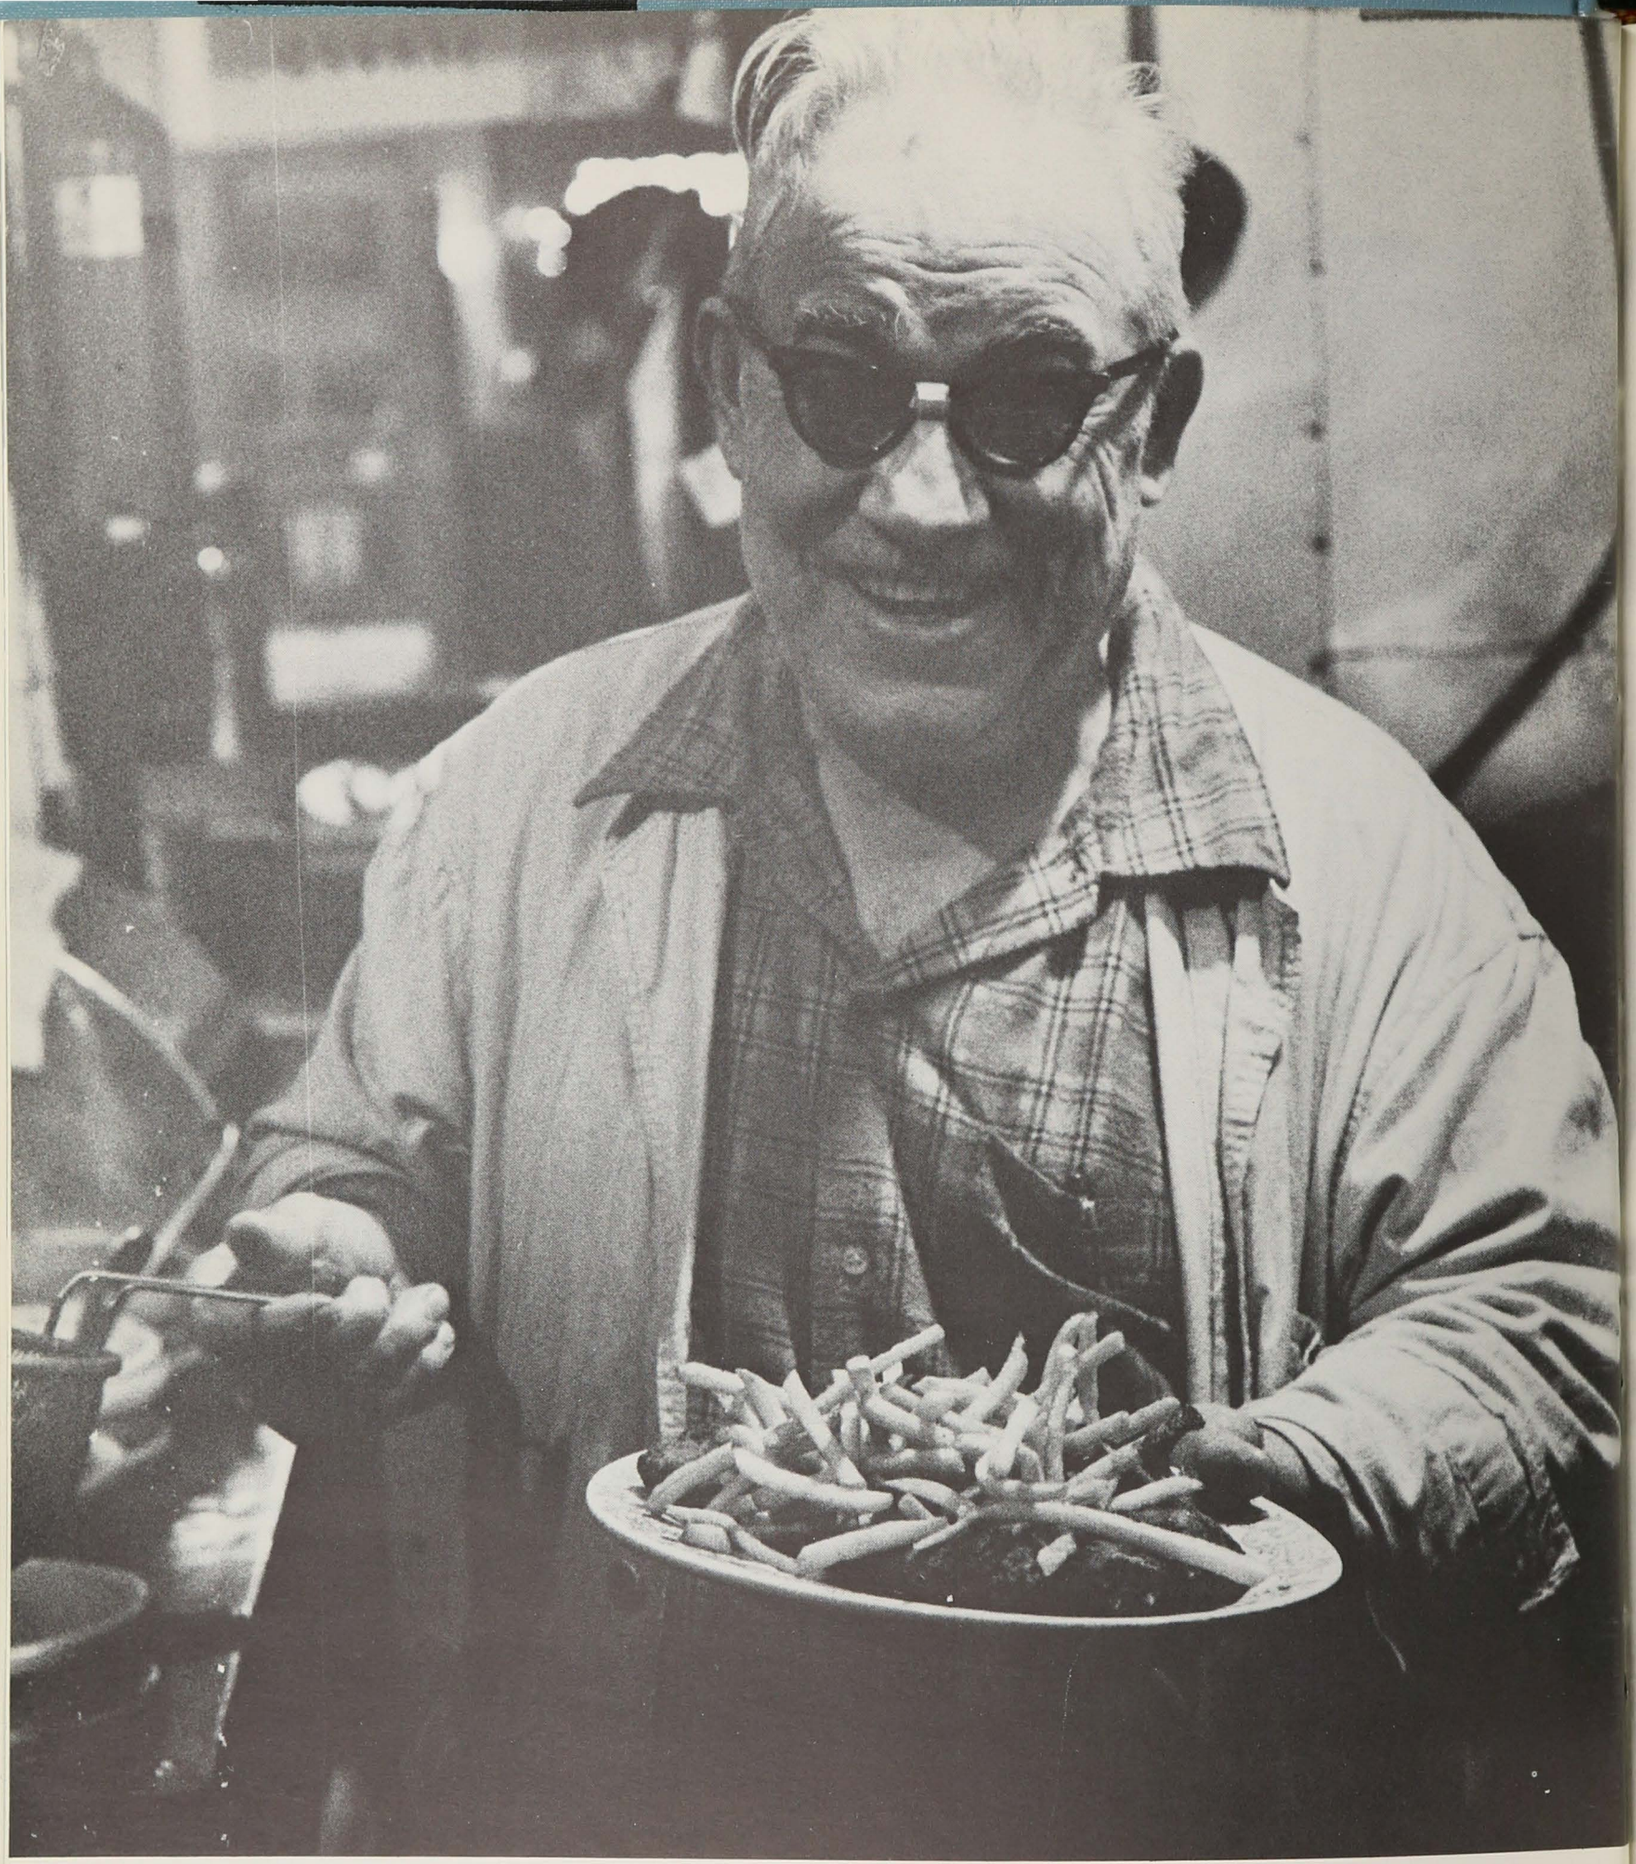

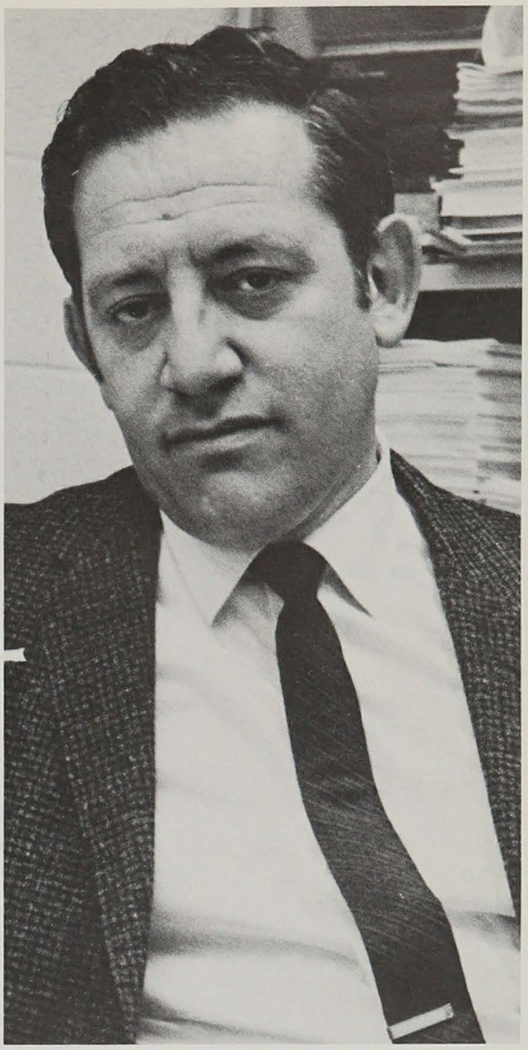

Calvert Street is a jungle? Lincoln Gordon can't get it up? Sociology is bad for you?

Nick will feed you? Dr. Walton is a teacher and Sol James is very enthusiastic?

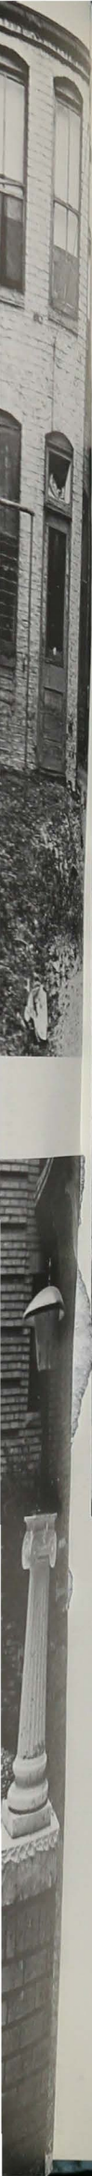

Dean Strider is dying?

So I asked him, "How do you like Hopkins?"

"It's o.k., I guess. I've been thinking of transferring if I can get into Harvard but I haven't decided yet.

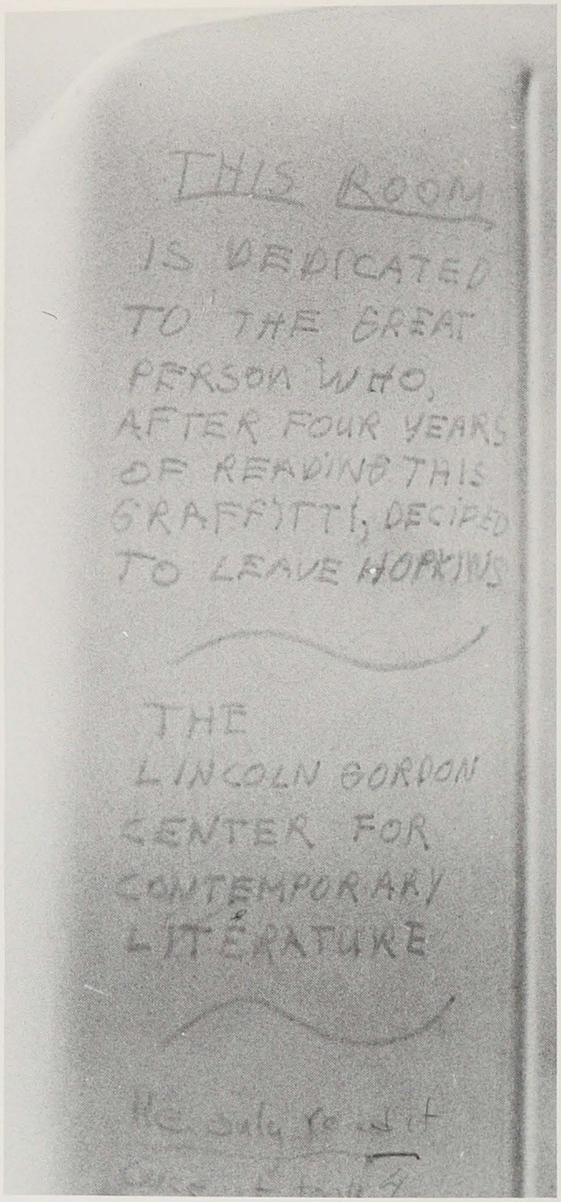

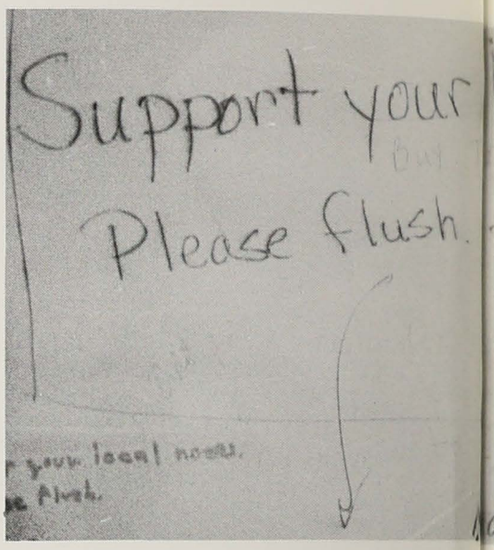

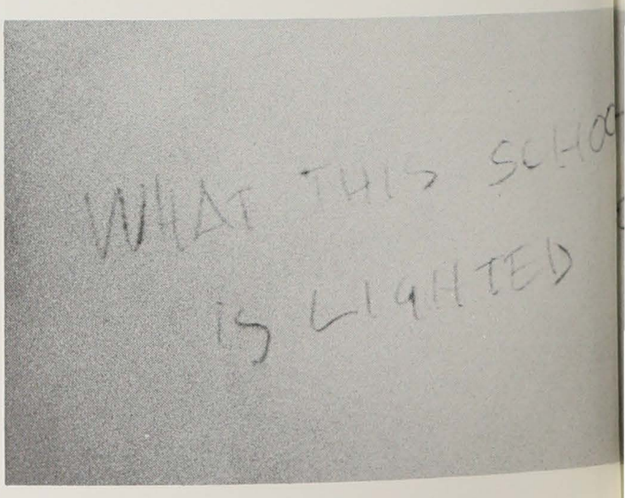

It sort of depends whether these three guys and I can find a good place for next year." We'd been silent for a minute or more and he seemed glad to be talking again.

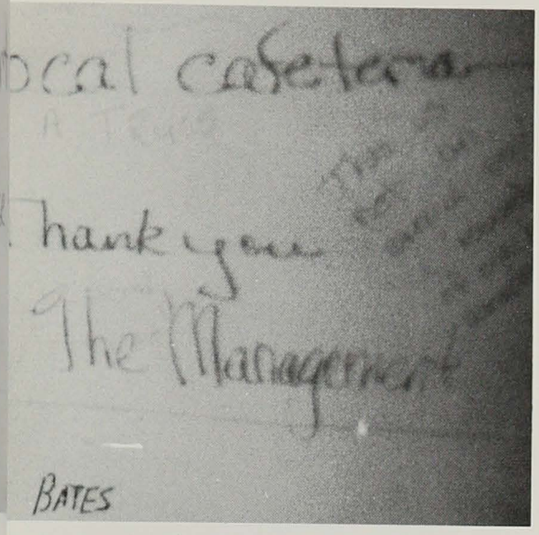

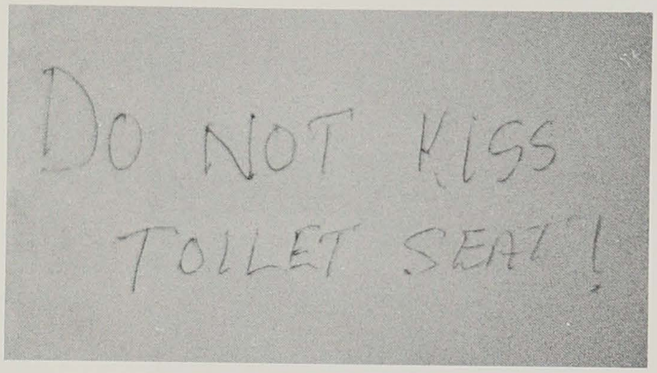

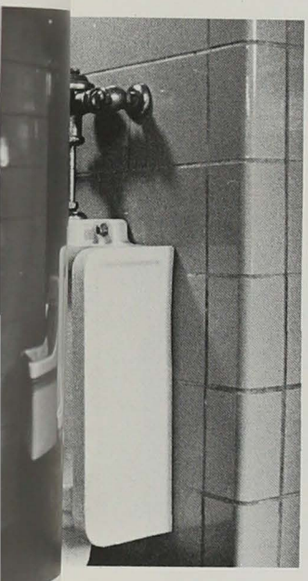

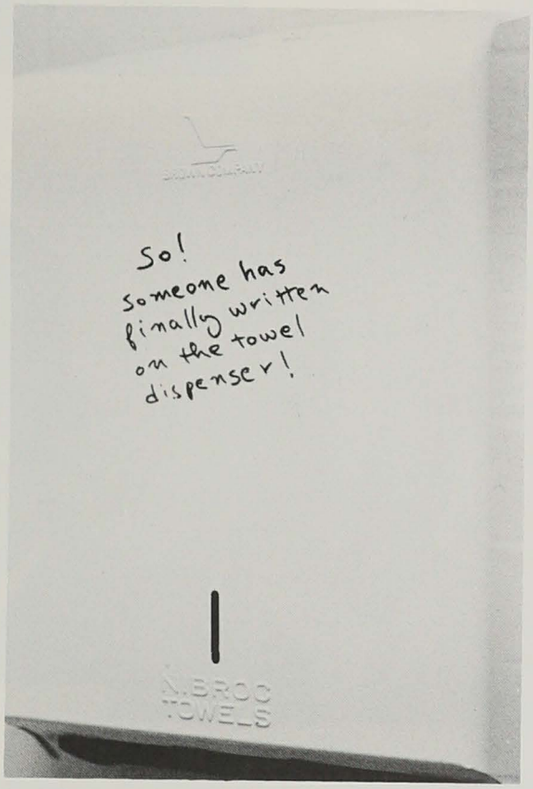

He met my eyes as he swung onto firmer ground. "I've gotta get out of the dorms, you know? It's really a drag there. People are really going crazy."

I said I knew.

He looked up at the clock and started piling up his books. "Hey," he said, "do you know where I can buy some speed?" I told him I'd look around. He said he'd call me and then he left.

He wouldn't call; I knew that. I hadn't been any help at all. But honest, what could I have done? He'd find out all right, I guess. But he'd be just as unable to tell you.

It made me laugh. I laughed for him and I laughed for me until the tears rolled down my face and everybody had looked.

I laughed for Nick and his immigrant faith . . . Ornstein and his middle-class angst . . .

Ron Owens and his beautiful blacks.

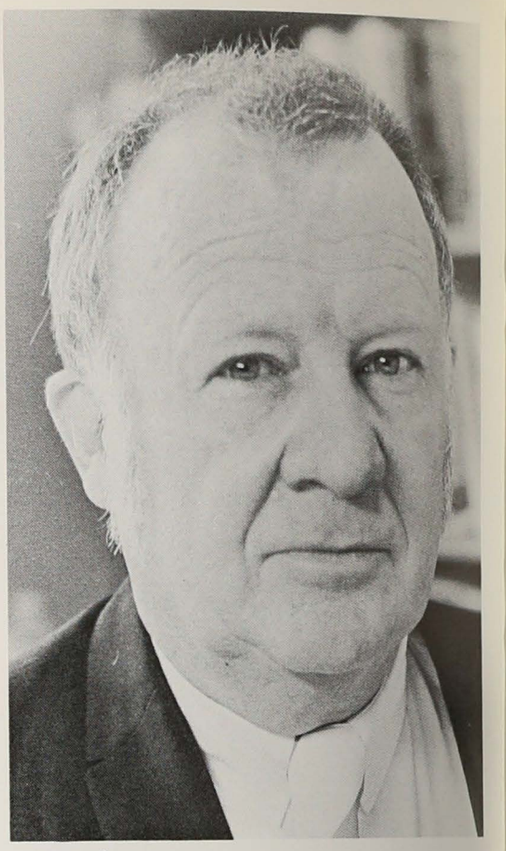

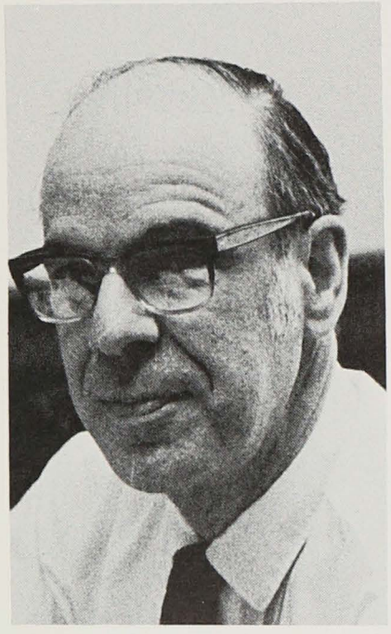

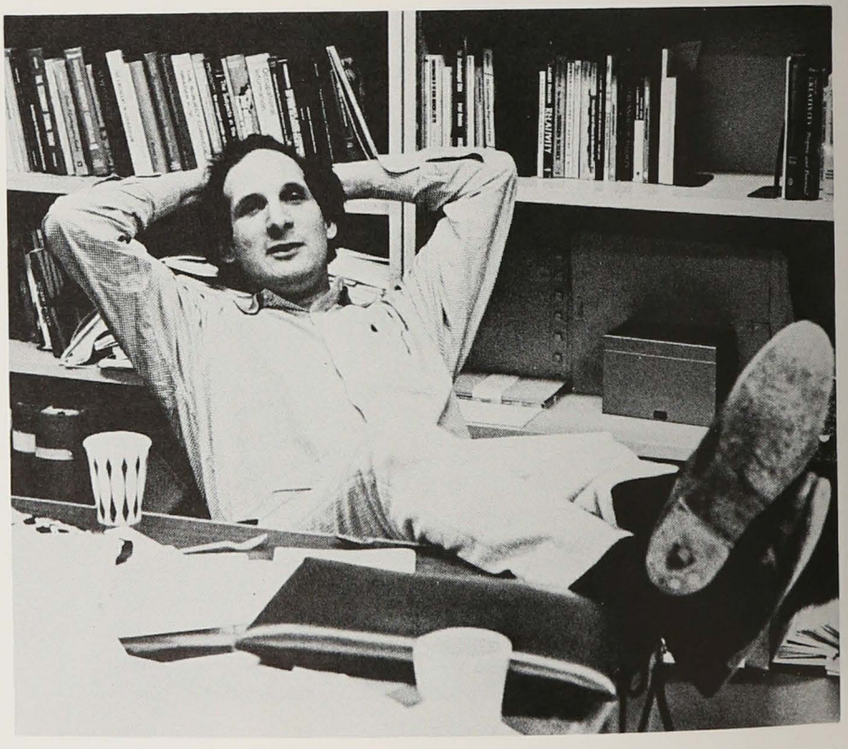

For the graduate wives and their cookbook cuisine. For Levering Hall and its brand new machines.

For William Bevan and Ross Jones. For Fred DeKuyper and Victor Dates.

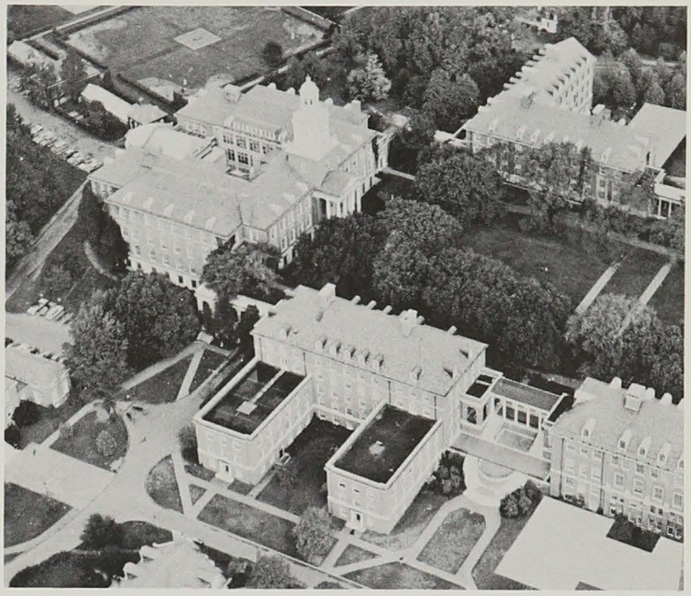

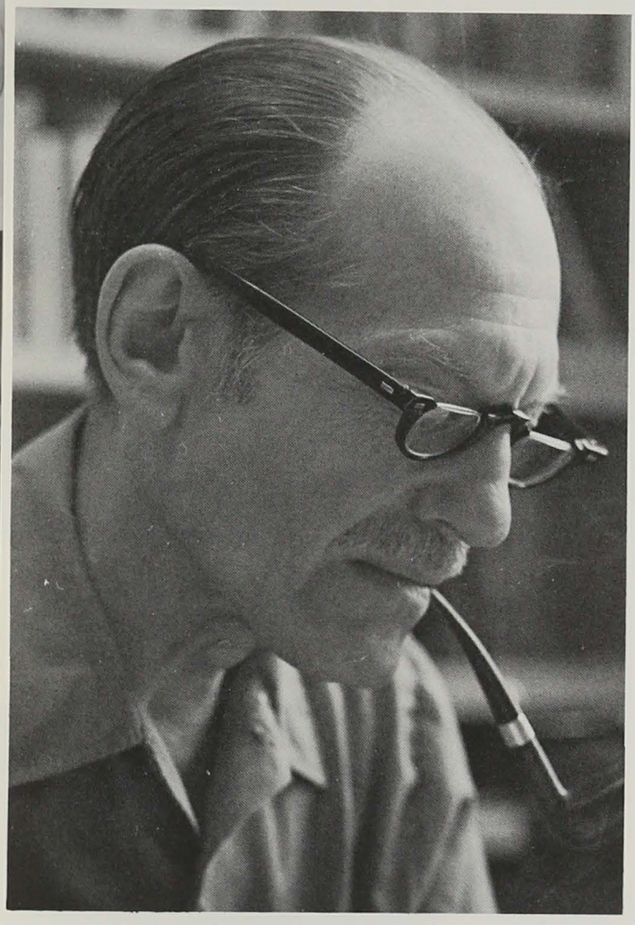

For Benton, Swanson, Hartman and Owen. And I laughed for Robert Strider.

For Chester Wickwire and his relevant faith. For Sol James and his second generation machine. For Lowe and Corwin, for Walton and Mann, and for the school which didn't seem to have time for them any more.

For lab manuals and slide rules . . . for trade books and textbooks and notebooks and blue books . . . for the books that the assistant professors are writing.

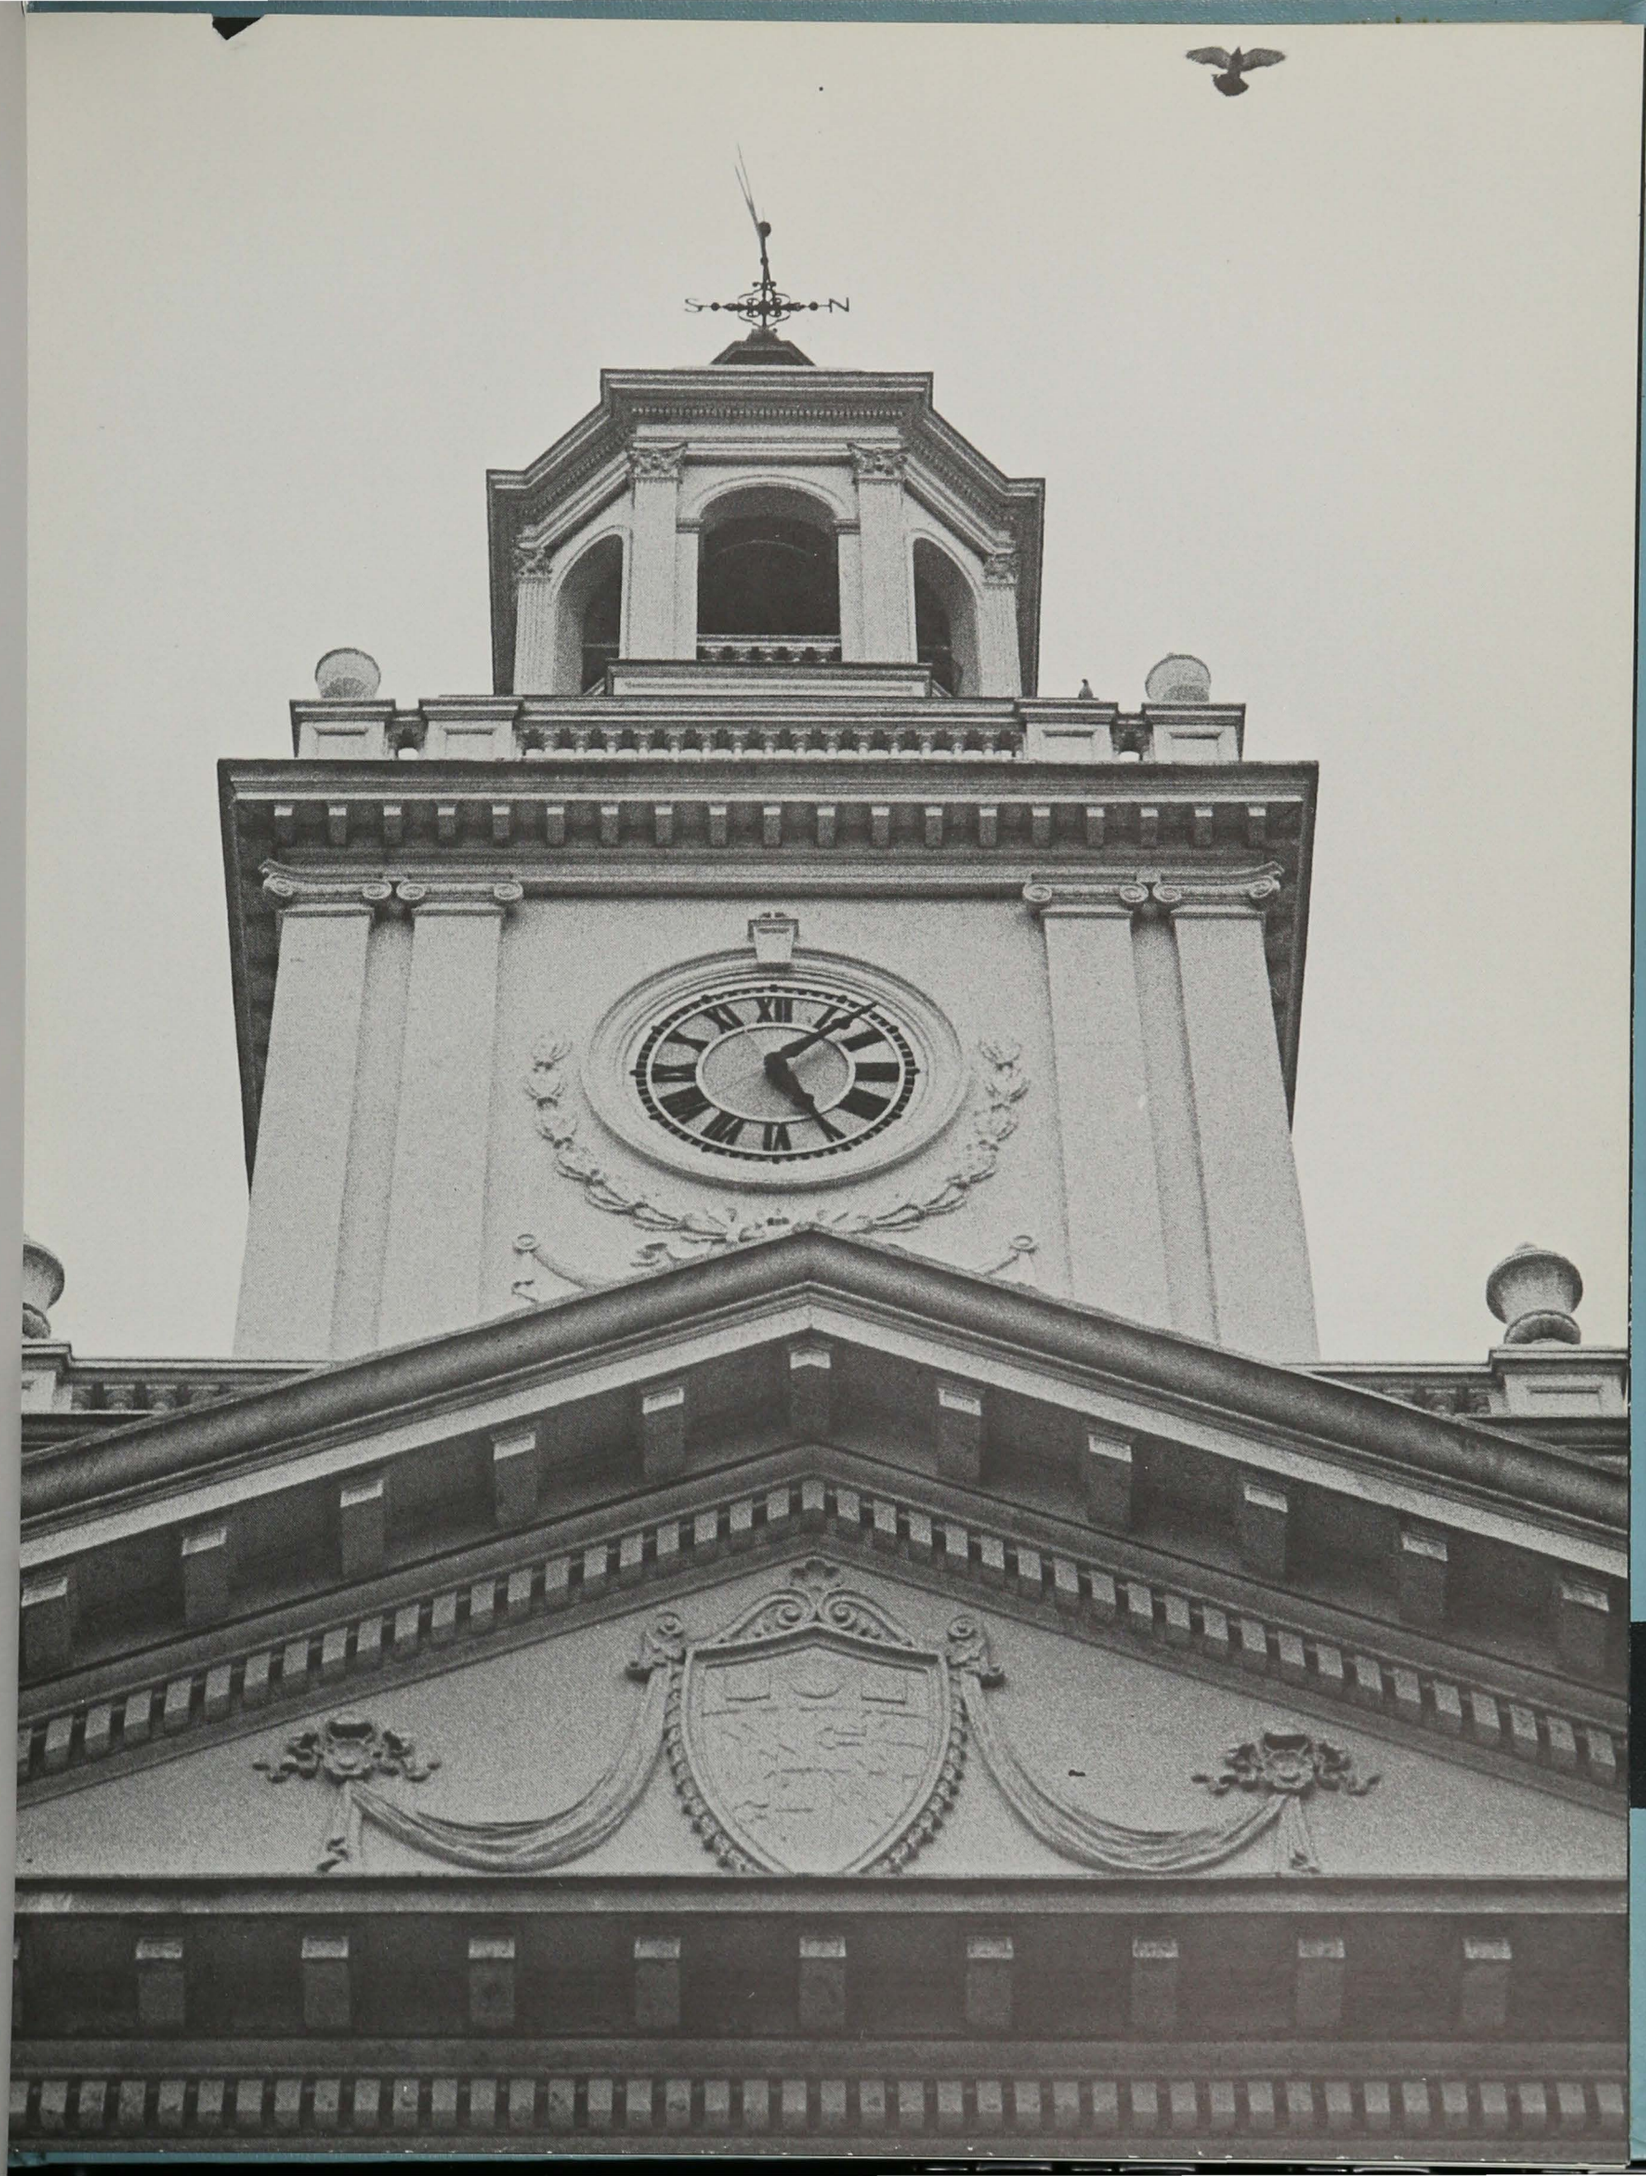

I laughed for SDS, for NUC, 1199E, 1231, the SA, SC, SAC, DSRC, the Barnstormers, the News-Letter, Hullabaloo and the old Blue Jays.

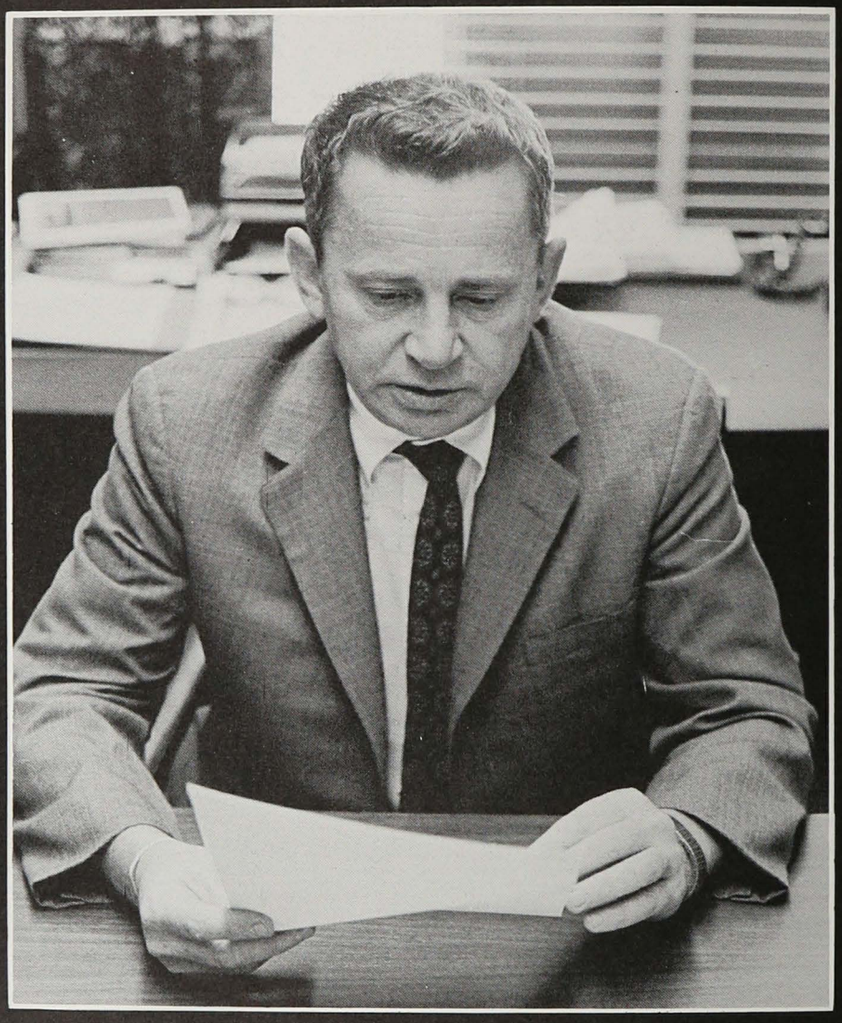

It's funny, you see, or it seemed so at the time. It's funny in its scope and frenzy, from a worried freshman looking for speed to an ousted president saying he tried.

Humor on the grand scale. Humor as only deadly serious men can produce. Humor . . . you see?

Robert L. Strider

July 2, 1922-September 4, 1971

Hopkins was fortunate to command the loyalty and energies of such a man. Robert L. Strider devoted his life to the University, and his concerns breached all internal boundaries. He was originally appointed to the faculty in 1950 as a Lecturer in Accounting, but his contributions soon extended far beyond the classroom. In later years, his knowledge, understanding, and appreciation of the strengths and limitations of the University as an academic institution were remarkably clear and incisive.

Bob was an administrator of high quality. During his career at Hopkins he held such posts as Assistant Plant Manager (in which capacity he personally supervised University housing), and Director of Financial Aid. As Assistant Dean, Associate Dean and finally Dean of Undergraduate and Graduate Studies, he participated to a steadily increasing degree in the academic life and organization of the University.

Yet Bob Strider was more than an academic or administrative officer. To a unique degree he was known, trusted, and respected by all groups on the campus. He knew the faculty—department chairmen, senior professors, and young assistant professors—better than almost any other individual. Undergraduates and graduate students streamed to his office to discuss personal or academic problems. University staff, from deans to maintenance personnel, knew him and had confidence in his judgment.

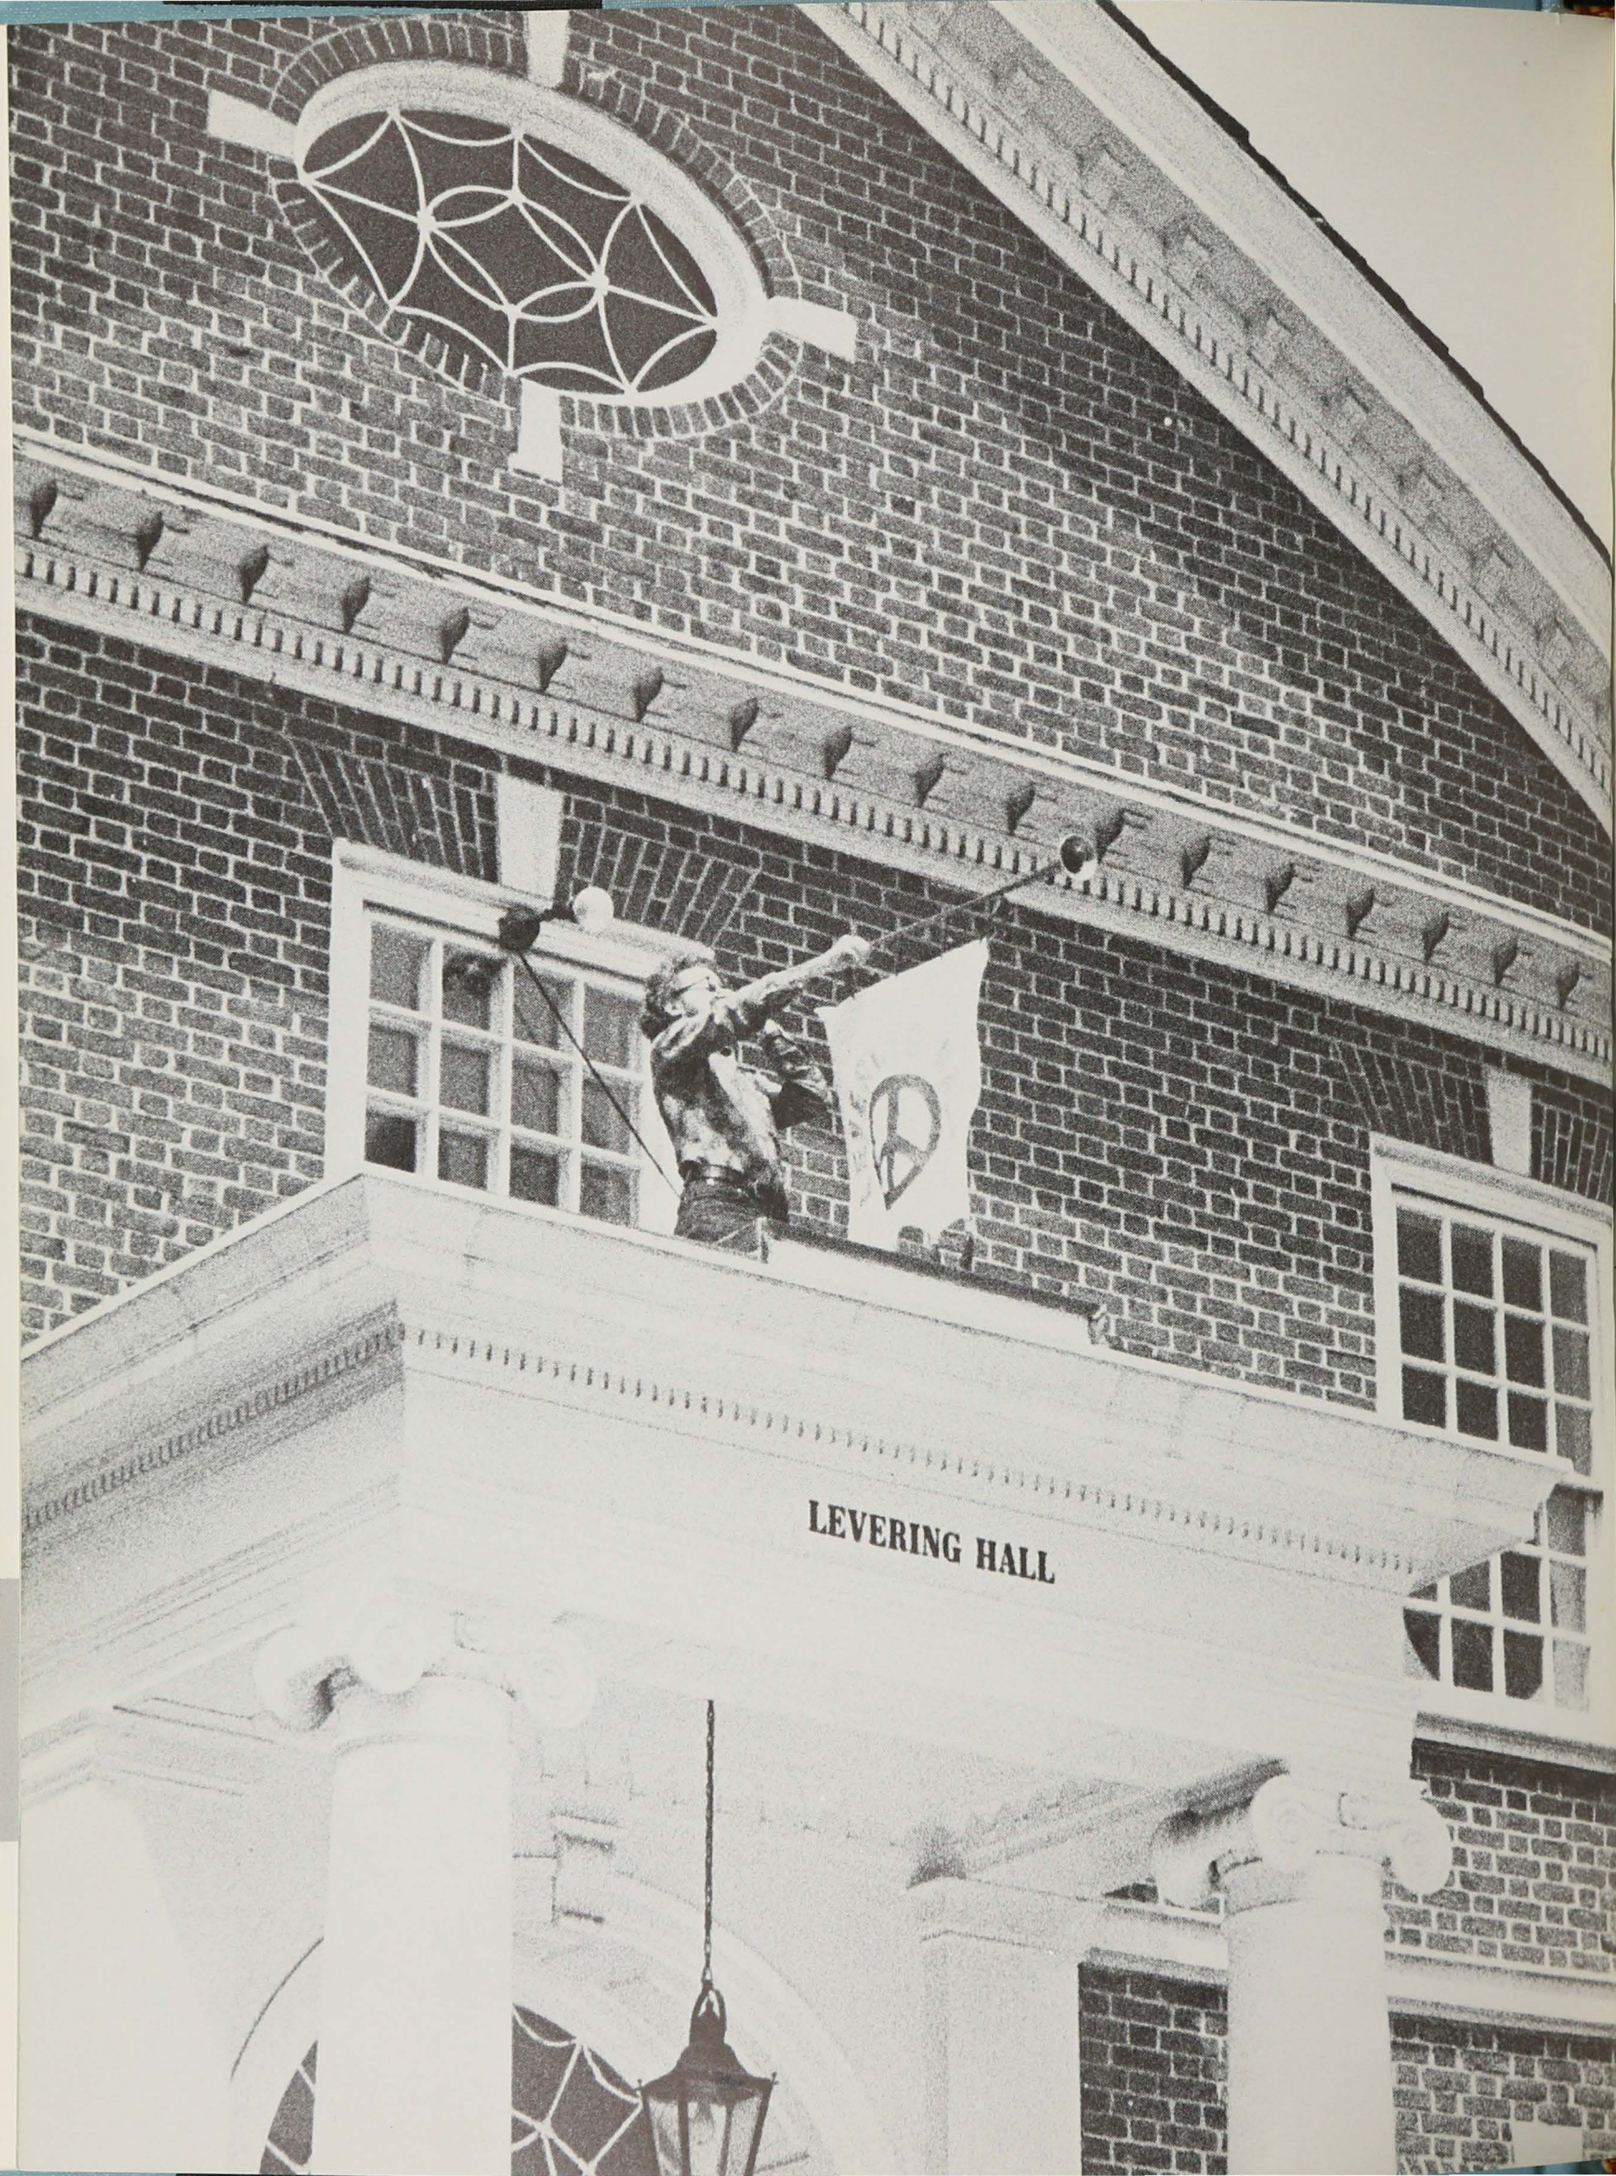

It is tragic that the University should have lost the services of Bob Strider at this point in its history when we so badly need his talents. Just one year ago, I asked him to assume new responsibilities as Dean of Undergraduate and Graduate Studies. In this capacity, he would be responsible for the formal administration of both undergraduate and graduate programs; would organize improved student services; and would supervise academic support offices. I well remember the satisfaction with which he accepted this challenge, for which he was uniquely qualified.

Nevertheless, as the year wore on, it became obvious to all of us who worked closely with him that he was not functioning with his usual enthusiasm or effectiveness. He must have realized that something serious was wrong, yet he did not complain and would not even seek medical advice. The man who was always ready to extend himself to help others, somehow found it impossible to ask for help himself.

With Bob's passing, the University has suffered a great loss. But I prefer to remember instead that this is a much better University for his having lived and worked here. In a day when the value of the University as a social organization is being questioned, Bob maintained a clear sense of academic purpose. In a day when administration for its own sake tends to flourish unchecked, Bob's influence was continually directed toward an intelligent ordering of priorities. And most of all, in a day when personal contact and concerns all too often are lost, Bob Strider could be counted upon to understand human insecurities and individual difficulties. In the words of a student who came to my office recently, "Dean Strider always cared."

With Bob Strider gone, the road ahead will be more difficult. In dedicating this volume to him, let us also dedicate ourselves to the cooperative effort to make this University a better place to work and live.

Conrad "Gebby" Gebelein

As the director of The Johns Hopkins University Band from 1924 to 1971, Conrad Gebelein has been a very special part of Hopkins athletics at Homewood and with the teams on the road.

Gebby, we take pride—not without a catch in our throats—in saying "Thank you." We will miss you. But we are not worried about you because we know that 'you'll be around'.
